Right-wing author and conspiracy theorist Stephen McNutt has told the Dutch media that he and his son were thrown off a Delta Air Lines flight in August because of his political views. "We got off the flight and my son said we were kicked off because of my political views," McNutt told broadcaster NOS on Tuesday, according to the Dutch newspaper Het Parool. "The captain and the flight attendant were laughing at us," he said. After asking for his son to translate what he had said, McNutt explained that the flight attendant told him that he and his son were “not allowed to get back on the plane.” McNutt told NOS that he was let back on the plane after a 15-minute delay. A Delta spokesperson told the Washington Post that the airline’s policy “does not allow customers to board with a carry-on that contains any form of political or religious literature.” “This includes political banners, flags, stickers, pamphlets, signs and literature,” the spokesperson said. “We have recently made a correction on a reservation that, contrary to our standard and policy, allowed a guest to bring this type of baggage on board. The guest was quickly removed from the flight, as required by law.” McNutt has previously appeared on Fox News and claimed that his son’s removal was a “completely false allegation” against him. “I don’t know why they had to run up to the flight and say something like that,” McNutt said. His son, Michael, was scheduled to fly with him to Florida, but opted to stay home, McNutt said, adding that his wife and children had been supportive. 82157476af
